In his annual shareholder letter, Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos revealed some interesting statistics about the company's workforce. Among them, Amazon employs over 1.3 million people worldwide, and over 500,000 of those employees are in the United States.

Of those 500,000 US employees, over 90,000 work in Amazon's fulfillment centers. The company has been in the news recently for its treatment of workers in those fulfillment centers, with reports of long hours and poor working conditions.

Bezos acknowledged those reports in his letter, but he also defended the company's practices. He said that Amazon is investing heavily in making its fulfillment centers more efficient, and that the company offers competitive pay and benefits to its employees.

Overall, Bezos said that Amazon is proud of the work it does to support its employees, and he urged shareholders to continue to support the company.

Jeff and Preston Bezos are father and son. Jeff is the founder, chairman, and CEO of Amazon. Preston is a vice president at Amazon. They both have a lot of experience in the tech industry. Jeff started Amazon in 1994, and it has become one of the most successful companies in the world. Preston started working at Amazon in 2006, and he has played a major role in its success. Jeff and Preston are both very intelligent and successful people.

In 1994, Jeff Bezos founded Amazon.com, an online bookseller that soon became one of the most influential companies in the world. Today, Amazon is a trillion-dollar company and Jeff Bezos is the world's richest man.

Jeff's younger brother, Preston, is also a successful businessman. In 2012, Preston co-founded Blue Origin, a aerospace company that is developing technology to make space travel more accessible and affordable.

Preston is also an accomplished philanthropist. In 2018, he and his wife, Jackie, founded the Day One Fund, a philanthropic initiative that is committed to helping homeless families and building early childhood education centers.

Preston and Jeff Bezos are two of the most successful and innovative businessmen of our time. Their story is an inspiring example of what can be accomplished when you set your mind to it.
