Zuckerberg and Chan seem to be very happy together, and they are often seen attending events or traveling to different countries. They are both active in philanthropy, and have donated billions of dollars to various causes.

In October of 2019, Mark Zuckerberg and his wife Priscilla Chan announced that they would be giving away $10 million to a variety of organizations that focus on women's empowerment. The donation is part of the #Chan Zuckerberg Initiative, which is a philanthropic organization that the couple founded in 2015.

The #Chan Zuckerberg Initiative has a three-pronged approach to its philanthropy: advance human potential and promote equal opportunity, build strong communities, and create a more just, equitable and inclusive world.

The donation to women's empowerment organizations is in line with the third goal of creating a more just, equitable and inclusive world. Zuckerberg and Chan believe that empowering women is one of the key ways to create a more just and equal world.

The donation will be split among four organizations: Girls Who Code, She Should Run, Step it Up, and the Equal Rights Advocates. Girls Who Code is a non-profit organization that works to close the gender gap in technology. She Should Run is a non-profit that works to increase the number of women in elected office. Step it Up is an organization that works to end gender-based violence. And the Equal Rights Advocates is a legal organization that works to protect and advance the civil and human rights of women and girls.

This donation is part of the couple's ongoing commitment to philanthropy. In the past, they have donated to a variety of causes, including education, health care, and immigration reform.
